

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
WESTERN DIVISION

DC COMICS,

Plaintiff,

vs.

PACIFIC PICTURES CORP., et al.

Defendants.

CASE NO. CV 10-3633 ODW (RZx)

ORDER GRANTING PLAINTIFF'S
MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY
JUDGMENT [458] AND DENYING
DEFENDANTS' CROSS-MOTION [478]

I. INTRODUCTION

DC Comics ("DC" or "Plaintiff") filed this action in May 2010 to secure its claimed interest in the Superman copyrights after certain heirs of Joseph Shuster, the first illustrator of Superman, served DC with a copyright termination notice purporting to recapture certain early Superman works as of October 26, 2013.

DC now moves for partial summary judgment as to the First and Third Claims. DC's First Claim contests the validity of the termination notice at issue here, and its Third Claim, pled in the alternative, challenges the web of agreements that Marc Toberoff and his entertainment companies and business partners engineered in alleged violation of DC's rights under the Copyright Act. (Mot. at 1 ("There is a pressing need to resolve these claims now, given the imminence of the 2013 termination date."))

///

1 II. FACTS

2 Semantic quibbles aside, the following facts are undisputed. On March 1, 1938,
3 Jerome Siegel and Joseph Shuster assigned to DC the “exclusive right to the use of the 4 [Superman] characters and story.” (UF 3.) “Action Comics #1 (‘AC#1’), published on 5 April 18, 1938, with a cover date of June 1938, featured an adapted version of Siegel and 6 Shuster’s Superman story.” (UF 4.) Defendants purport to, but do not actually dispute this 7 fact by arguing “AC #1 did not feature an ‘adapted version of Siegel and Shuster’s
8 Superman story.’ Siegel and Shuster reformatted their prior Superman story from a 9 newspaper format to a magazine format.” (Id.) All the same, after AC#1 was published, 10 Siegel and Shuster continued to supply DC with draft Superman material pursuant to 11 work-for-hire agreements. Siegel and Shuster were compensated for their work in royalties
12 and bonuses, both of which increased with Superman’s success. (UF 5.)

13 By 1941, the Saturday Evening Post reported that Siegel and Shuster stood to make 14 over $2 million (in today’s dollars) in the next year alone. (UF 6 (“All present day dollar
15 amounts were calculated using the Bureau of Labor Statistics’ online inflation calculator, 16 available at: http://www.bls.gov/data/inflation\_calculator.htm/.”).) In 1947, Siegel and 17 Shuster sued DC in New York to invalidate the 1938 assignment. The court found that the 18 1938 assignment granted all Superman rights to DC. In 1948, the parties entered into a 19 stipulated judgment pursuant to which Siegel and Shuster acknowledged that the 1938
20 assignment granted DC all rights in Superman. (UF 7.)

21 In a 1975 agreement, DC provided Siegel and Shuster with (in today’s dollars) lump
22 sums of $75,000 each, lifetime annual payments of $80,000 each per year, survivor
23 payments to their heirs, and insurance coverage, as well as “credits” on new Superman
24 works. Siegel and Shuster acknowledged that DC owned all Superman-related copyrights.
25 (UF 8.) Defendants argue DC does not disclose its financial assumptions for its calculation
26 (though provided earlier), contending instead that the 1975 agreement called for “monthly
27 payments of $20,000 . . . and a lump sum payment of $17,500.” (Id.)

28 ///

1 DC has voluntarily increased the annual payments; made periodic cost-of-living
2 adjustments; given special bonuses; and paid to have Siegel, Shuster, and their families
3 travel to Superman-related events. (UF 9.) All told, the Siegels and Shusters have been 4 paid over $4 million under the 1975 agreement, not including medical benefits or bonuses.
5 (UF 10.) Shuster passed away on July 30, 1992. (UF 12.)

6 Shuster had no wife or child, and his will named his sister, Jean Peavy, as sole 7 beneficiary and executrix of his estate. (UF 13.) Defendants dispute this, arguing the 8 statement “omits that Shuster’s will named Mark Warren Peavy, Jean’s son, as beneficiary
9 in the event Jean predeceased him and omits that the will states: ‘In the event that my sister
10 is for any reason unable or unwilling to act as executrix hereof, I nominate and appoint 11 Mark Warren Peavy to act as executor.’” (Opp’n UF.) On August 17, 1992, Jean filed an 12 affidavit in California state court identifying herself as Shuster’s “successor” and sole heir
13 and requesting that certain property “be paid, delivered or transferred to her.” (UF 14.)

14 Four days after filing her affidavit in state court, Jean wrote to DC, identifying 15 herself as “heir to [Joseph Shuster’s] Will” and asking DC to pay Shuster’s “final debts
16 and expenses.” (UF 15.) Defendants attempt, but again fail to dispute this fact by pointing 17 out that Jean actually stated “ [a]ny help that Time Warner could give to the family of Joe 18 Shuster to pay his final debts and expenses would be warmly appreciated.” (Opp’n UF.)
19 DC offered to cover Joe’s debts and increase survivor payments to his brother Frank from 20 $5,000 to $25,000 per year. (UF 16; Petrocelli Decl. Exh. 24.)

21 On September 10, 1992, Frank sent a letter to DC’s then-Executive Vice President,
22 Paul Levitz, stating he was “extremely pleased” with the increased payments and asking,
23 after “discuss[ing] this good news with [Jean],” that payments be made directly to Jean,
24 who would “send [Frank] whatever money [he] wanted as a gift which would not be 25 taxable to [him].” Frank asked if he and Jean could meet with Levitz in New York to 26 discuss the issue. (UF 17.) Defendants’ sole objection to this fact is that it misleadingly
27 fails to include subsequent correspondence. (Opp’n UF.)

28 ///

1 Paul Levitz dealt with many authors and heirs during his decades as president of DC.
2 When DC agreed to grant an author or heir's request for additional money, Levitz would 3 give them this admonition: "this agreement would represent the author/heir's last and final 4 deal with DC, and would fully resolve any past, present, or future claims against DC."
5 Levitz reiterated this admonition to Frank and Jean in 1992, who confirmed they 6 understood and agreed. (UF 18.) The parties executed an agreement on October 2, 1992
7 under which DC would cover Shuster's debts and pay Jean $25,000 a year for the rest of 8 her life. In exchange, Jean and Frank re-granted all of Shuster's rights to DC and vowed 9 never to assert a claim to such rights. (UF 19; Petrocelli Decl. Exh. 24.)

10 Over the next decade, DC maintained good relations with the Shusters, and Jean and 11 Paul Levitz corresponded regularly. In the close-to-60 letters back and forth between Paul
12 and Jean, Jean thanked DC for its generosity, reaffirmed the 1992 agreement, and requested
13 bonus payments in excess of those required. (UF 20.) Defendants contend that, over this 14 decade, Jean expressed displeasure at the amount and form of her payments and requested
15 changes. (Opp'n UF.) In a 1993 letter, Jean confirmed she would "stick to our bargain"
16 and not attempt "to reclaim the Superman copyright," but asked for an increase in 17 payments "plus a yearly increment to account for inflation." (UF 21.) Defendants contend
18 "Jean stated that at the present time 'Frank and I are not planning to reclaim the Superman
19 copyright.' [And]: 'We believe we have a right to expect that you will be fair with us as 20 well and will grant our request for increased payment. We will stick to our bargain which 21 we signed, dated as of October 1, 1992'" (Opp'n UF.)

22 In 1999, Congress amended the copyright statute to grant additional statutory heirs 23 termination rights under 17 U.S.C. § 304(d). Upon learning that Jerry Siegel's heirs had 24 served a copyright termination notice on DC, Jean reiterated her commitment "to honor"
25 the 1992 Agreement, and again asked for a bonus:

26 I have learned from the Internet that Joanne Siegel has filed a copyright claim for 27 Superman. I want you to know that I intend to continue to honor our pension 28 agreement. I would, however, appreciate a generous bonus for this year as you had (UF 22.)

1 In 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001, DC provided additional 2 bonuses to Jean, ranging from $10,000 to $25,000. (UF 23.) In one instance when Jean
3 asked for a bonus, DC made clear its position that Jean had no legal right to make such
4 requests, but would pay her a bonus anyway, for which she thanked DC. (UF 24.) Jean’s
5 50-year-old son, Mark Warren Peary (born Peavy) testified that Jean was of sound mind
6 when she sent these letters to DC. (UF 26.) Mark Peary, Jean’s doctor, and Jean’s
7 daughter all testified that, after “suffer[ing] a debilitating stroke in May of 2009,” Jean has 8 aphasia, and has difficulty communicating and “understand[ing] what people are saying.”
9 (UF 27.) On November 7, 2003, Mark Warren Peary (as substitute executor of the Shuster
10 estate) served on DC a notice of termination of the prior grants of Shuster’s Superman
11 copyrights. (See Petrocelli Decl. Exh. 37.) Other facts shall be discussed as necessary.

12 III. DISCUSSION

13 As to its First Claim, DC seeks a declaration that the “Shuster Termination Notice
14 [is] invalid.” (First Amended Complaint “FAC”, Docket No. 49 ¶¶ 106–34. DC argues 15 it is entitled to summary judgment on three grounds: (1) “The 1992 Agreement Bars the 16 Shusters from Pursuing Termination[;]” (2) “The Shusters Lack the Majority Interest
17 Necessary to Terminate” because they assigned 50% of their putative rights to Pacific
18 Pictures; and (3) “There Is No Statutory Basis for the Shusters to Terminate, given that Joe
19 Shuster had no statutory heir under the Copyright Act when he died.” (Mot. at 9.) “DC’s
20 Third Claim, pled in the alternative, alleges that the Pacific Pictures Agreements and 2008
21 consent agreement improperly restrict the Shuster heirs’ ability to enter into agreements
22 with DC, in violation of § 304(c)(6)(D) of the Copyright Act.” (Id.)

23 1992 Agreement

24 The Copyright Act provides a termination right for the prior grant of a copyright
25 transfer or license only if the grant was made prior to January 1, 1978. 17 U.S.C. § 304(d).
26 Our inquiry begins, then, with whether the 1992 Agreement superseded “Joseph Shuster’s
27 key 1938 Grant and subsequent Superman grants[,]” as Defendants put it. (Opp’n at 12.)
28

1 DC argues the 1992 agreement between DC and Jean Shuster Peavy and Frank
2 Shuster – Joseph’s siblings – bars the Shusters from exercising their statutory termination
3 rights. (Mot. at 10.) That agreement provides, in pertinent part:

4 We [DC] ask you to confirm by your signatures below that this agreement fully 5 settles all claims to any payments or other rights or remedies which you may have 6 under any other agreement or otherwise, whether now or hereafter existing 7 regarding any copyrights, trademarks, or other property right in any and all work 8 created in whole or in part by your brother, Joseph Shuster, or any works based thereon. In any event, you now grant to us any such rights and release us, our licensees and all others acting with our permission, and covenant not to assert any claim of right, by suit or otherwise, with respect to the above, now and forever.
(SUF 19; Petrocelli Decl. Exh. 24 (emphasis added).)

9 As Defendants argued earlier in this litigation, New York law governs the 1992
10 Agreement. (See Docket No. 191 at 4 n.6 (applying choice of law principles and 11 concluding “New York law clearly applies”); Docket No. 333 at 21; see also Reply at 2 12 (Defendants agree, “whether [an] Agreement terminated and superseded [another],’ is 13 determined by governing state law – in this case, as in Steinbeck, ‘New York law’”
14 (quoting Penguin Group (USA) Inc. v. Steinbeck, 537 F.3d 193, 200 (2nd Cir. 2008))).)

15 Under New York law, “parties to an agreement can mutually agree to terminate it
16 by expressly assenting to its rescission while simultaneously entering into a new agreement
17 dealing with the same subject matter.” Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 200 (quoting Jones v. Trice, 18 608 N.Y.S.2d 688, 688 (N.Y. App. Div. 1994); see also Northville Indus. Corp. v. Fort
19 Neck Oil Term. Corp., 474 N.Y.S.2d 122, 125 (N.Y. App. Div. 1984) (“[W]here [ ] parties 20 have clearly expressed . . . their intention that a subsequent agreement supersede or 21 substitute for an old agreement, the subsequent agreement extinguishes the old one and the 22 remedy for any breach thereof is to sue on the superseding agreement.”). The pertinent 23 inquiry is thus “whether the subsequent agreement, . . . in whatever form it may be, is[, as]
24 a matter of intention, expressed or implied, a superseder of, or substitution for, the old 25 agreement.” Goldbard v. Empire State Mut. Ins. Co., 171 N.Y.S.2d 194, 199 (N.Y. App.
26 Div. 1958) (emphasis added).

27 Defendants argue “the language of the 1992 Agreement clearly demonstrates that it
28 was not a revocation or re-grant of Joe Shuster’s prior Superman copyright grants and ends

1 the analysis.” (Opp’n at 15.) The Court does not share Defendants’ view of clarity. With 2 a broad release and all-encompassing language, it would here appear that the 1992
3 Agreement does indeed aim to supersede all prior agreements between the parties. (See 4 SUF 19 (“[T]his agreement fully settles all claims to any payments or other rights or 5 remedies which you may have under any other agreement or otherwise, whether now or 6 hereafter existing regarding any copyrights . . . in any and all work created in whole or in
7 part by your brother, Joseph Shuster.” (emphasis added)).) Just as it says, the 1992
8 Agreement “fully settles” all obligations under any and all agreements.

9 As Defendants themselves acknowledge, “[w]here, as here, a contract’s terms are 10 unambiguous, the ‘intent of the parties must be determined from their final writing and no
11 parol evidence or extrinsic evidence is admissible.’” (Opp’n at 15 (quoting Int’l Klafter 12 Co., Inc. v. Cont’l Cas. Co., 869 F.2d 96, 100 (2d Cir. 1989))); see also Duane Reade, Inc.
13 v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 411 F.3d 384, 390 (2d Cir. 2005) (“Whether a contract 14 is ambiguous is a threshold question of law . . . [for] the court.”).

15 Like Defendants, the Court finds no ambiguity in the parties’ agreement. Unlike 16 Defendants, however, the Court finds that the 1992 Agreement does in fact settle all prior 17 agreements. As Black’s Law Dictionary confirms, “full settlement” is “a settlement and 18 release of all pending claims between the parties.” Black’s Law Dictionary 1497 (9th ed.
19 2009). The 1992 Agreement extends such release to “all claims to any payments or other 20 rights or remedies which [the Shusters] may have under any other agreement or otherwise,
21 whether now or hereafter existing regarding any copyrights . . . .” (SUF 19.) Accordingly,
22 the 1992 Agreement not only settled and released all “claims . . . rights [and] remedies”
23 concerning the Shuster copyrights under all prior agreements, but it also extended the 24 release to such rights and remedies as might exist “otherwise.” (Id.)

25 Immediately after so settling all rights, the 1992 Agreement expressly and 26 unambiguously provides: “In any event, you [Shuster’s heir] now grant to us any such 27 rights and release us, our licensees and all others acting with our permission, and covenant 28 not to assert any claim of right, by suit or otherwise, with respect to the above, now and

1 forever.” (SUF 19; Petrocelli Decl., Exh. 24 (emphasis added).)

2 Plainly, this subsequent grant deals with the same subject matter settled immediately
3 above (DC’s copyright interests). In other words, the 1992 Agreement first settled all 4 claims, and then granted DC “such rights” as were just settled, essentially revoking and re-5 granting all copyright agreements and interest. As New York law recognizes, “parties to 6 an agreement can mutually agree to terminate it by expressly assenting to its rescission
7 while simultaneously entering into a new agreement dealing with the same subject matter.”
8 Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 200 (citation omitted); see also Milne v. Stephen Slesinger, Inc., 430
9 F.3d 1036, 1046 (9th Cir. 2005) (1983 agreement superseding pre-1978 grant “is not 10 subject to termination under section 304(d) because it was not ‘executed before January 1, 11 1978,’ as the statute expressly requires”).

12 Milne involved the rights to Winnie the Pooh. In 1930, Pooh’s author, A.A. Milne,
13 granted his copyright interest in Winnie the Pooh to SSI in exchange for a share of future
14 royalties. 430 F.3d at 1040. In 1983, A.A.’s son, Christopher, re-granted those same rights
15 to SSI and agreed not to pursue termination in exchange for increased royalties.
16 Subsequently, Christopher’s daughter Clare attempted to terminate A.A.’s 1930 grant to 17 SSI. The Ninth Circuit held that her father’s 1983 contract revoked all pre-1978 grants 18 which might otherwise have been terminable. Id. As Defendants note, “[i]n lieu of 19 statutory termination, Christopher agreed to the contractual ‘revocation of the [1930]
20 agreement[] in favor of the new agreement, followed by the re-granting (on the same page)
21 of the rights in the Pooh works to SSI.’” (Opp’n at 9 (“Milne held there was no longer a 22 1930 grant to terminate, because the 1983 contract had expressly revoked it and expressly 23 re-granted the copyrights to SSI.” (citation omitted)).)

24 Relying in part on Milne, Steinbeck reached a similar conclusion. In 1938, John 25 Steinbeck granted the copyrights in his most popular works to his publisher. After John’s 26 death, his termination interest passed by statute to his widow Elaine and his children.
27 Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 196, 203. Though Elaine did not hold the majority share of John’s 28 termination interest in 1994 necessary to terminate, as successor by will to John’s

1 copyrights, she entered into an agreement with the publisher superseding the 1938
2 agreement in exchange for increased royalties and other benefits. John's children
3 subsequently served a notice to terminate the 1938 grant, arguing Elaine's 1994 agreement
4 was an "agreement to the contrary" because it had the effect of depriving them of their 5 termination rights. Finding against the children, the Second Circuit found it improper to 6 read the prohibition on "'agreement[s] to the contrary' so broadly that it would include any 7 agreement that has the effect of eliminating a termination right." Id. at 202 (noting heirs
8 can "threaten (or . . . make good on a threat) to exercise termination rights and extract more 9 favorable terms from early grants of an author's copyright," but they do not have "more
10 than one opportunity, between them, to use termination rights to enhance their bargaining 11 power or to exercise them.").

12 Pointing in opposition to Classic Media, Inc. v. Mewborn, 532 F.3d 978 (9th Cir.
13 2008), Defendants argue the "Ninth Circuit emphasized that Mewborn's 1978 agreement, 14 unlike [that] in Milne, did not 'expressly revoke the earlier . . . assignments.'" (Opp'n at 15 11 (quoting Mewborn, 532 F3d at 989).) In Mewborn, the Ninth Circuit upheld a 16 termination notice regarding the novel "Lassie Come Home." In 1976, the author's 17 daughter, Mewborn, assigned her share of Lassie rights to the publisher. Id. at 980. In 18 1978, she signed a second contract, which purported to assign additional copyrights. Id.
19 at 981. In 1996, Mewborn served a termination notice of her 1976 grant. The publisher
20 sued, claiming the 1978 grant "superseded" the 1976 grant and cannot be terminated.
21 Finding Milne inapplicable, the Ninth Circuit upheld the termination and rejected the 22 publisher's attempt to re-characterize the 1978 grant as a "revocation and re-grant." Id. at 23 989.

24 Contrary to Defendants' assertion, however, the Ninth Circuit did not rest its 25 decision on the lack of an express revocation of earlier agreements. See id. at 989
26 ("Because we conclude that the 1978 Assignment did not expressly or impliedly transfer
27 Mewborn's termination right as to the 1976 Assignment . . . , the district court improperly
28 concluded that the 1978 Assignment included a grant of Mewborn's termination right.")

1 (emphasis added)). Rather than revoke and supersede prior agreements, the Ninth Circuit
2 found that the “1978 Assignment simply assigned to Classic’s predecessor-in-interest the 3 additional enumerated rights that Mewborn had not assigned in 1976.” Id.

4 Such is not the case here. The broad and all-encompassing language of the 1992
5 Agreement unmistakably operates to supersede all prior grants. (See Petrocelli Decl. Exh.
6 24.) Unlike Mewborn, where the post-1978 agreement transferred rights “in addition to”
7 those transferred in pre-1978 grants, the 1992 Agreement deals squarely with the same 8 subject matter as the parties’ earlier agreements, settling and displacing “all claims . . .
9 under any agreement” “or otherwise” related to “any and all” works “created in whole or 10 in part by . . . Joseph Shuster.” (UF 19.) Unlike the heirs in Mewborn, moreover, Jean and 11 Frank were aware of the Copyright Act’s termination rights when they bargained for and 12 entered into the 1992 Agreement. (See UF 17, 21, 22.) As DC points out, “the fact that 13 Jean and Frank were able to obtain hundreds of thousands of dollars in benefits . . . shows
14 that Mewborn’s concerns about [the heirs’] ignorance are inapt here.” (Mot. at 17.)

15 Defendants insist “the [1992] agreement does not even mention Superman or Joseph 16 Shuster’s key 1938 Grant and subsequent Superman grants.” (Opp’n at 12.) Surely 17 Defendants recognize that “any and all work created in whole or in part by . . . Joseph 18 Shuster” necessarily includes his most famous creation, Superman. And, just as clear, once 19 a party seeks to supersede all prior agreements, that party need not specifically list every 20 superseded agreement, lest that party forget one such agreement and thus leave open the 21 door for subsequent disputes. Indeed, Defendants’ own expansive language that the 1992
22 Agreement does not mention “Joseph Shuster’s key 1938 Grant and subsequent Superman 23 grants” counsels in favor of all-encompassing language.

24 It bears noting here that, as one New York court put it, “while the question of 25 whether a substituted agreement effects a discharge of a prior agreement constitutes a 26 triable issue of fact if the opponent offers relevant extrinsic evidence, such an issue of fact 27 does not arise when the opponent offers no evidence as to the parties’ intent in making the 28 agreement.” Callanan Indus, Inc. v. Micheli Contracting Corp., 508 N.Y.S.2d 711, 712

1 (N.Y. App. Div. 1986) (citations omitted).

2 As in Callanan, although Defendants have alleged in conclusory terms that they did
3 not intend for the 1992 Agreement to discharge and supersede all prior copyright grants,
4 they have offered no evidence in support of that conclusion. Nor, indeed, have Defendants
5 even controverted the facts alleged in Plaintiff’s moving papers with anything other than 6 “patently insufficient” general denials. Id.; see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 7 323–24 (1986) (explicating the parties’ relative burdens on summary judgment).

8 To the extent Defendants argue “the 1992 Agreement by Frank and Jean cannot bar
9 the Shuster Executor’s exercise of his termination rights” (Opp’n at 8), they are wrong.
10 As noted in Steinbeck, “nothing in the statute suggests that an author or an author’s
11 statutory heirs are entitled to more than one opportunity, between them, to use termination
12 rights to enhance their bargaining power or to exercise them.” 537 F.3d at 204.

13 Jean Peavy, Joseph Shuster’s sister and sole heir, entered into the 1992 Agreement
14 (along with Frank) which renegotiated the terms of the parties’ prior agreements to her and 15 Frank’s benefit. By taking advantage of this opportunity, she exhausted the single 16 opportunity provided by statute to the Shuster heirs to revisit the terms of Shuster’s original 17 grants of his copyrights. As in Milne, Defendants “present[] no authority suggesting that 18 Congress designed the statutory termination provisions to prevent parties from agreeing to 19 a simultaneous revocation and new grant of rights.” Milne, 430 F.3d at 1046–47
20 (“Certainly with regard to [Milne], [the heir’s] concerns are unfounded. The 1983
21 agreement came about some seven years after the copyright owner felt empowered to 22 exercise his right of termination under the 1976 Copyright Act, and after he was able to 23 assess the works’ value over the course of more than five decades.”).

24 Similarly here, the 1992 Agreement came about several years “after the copyright
25 owner felt empowered to exercise his right of termination under the 1976 Copyright 26 Act . . . .” Id. Joseph Shuster, who himself passed away in 1992, never terminated his 27 prior grants of the Superman copyrights to DC. And, by entering into the 1992 Agreement
28 – which increased Frank and Jean’s payments – the heirs essentially struck a deal that binds

1 all other heirs. See Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 202. (“Once the termination right is
2 extinguished, it is extinguished with respect to all parties holding a termination interest,
3 whether or not they agreed to its exercise.”).<sup>1</sup>

4 Defendants next argue that an author or his estate may exercise termination rights
5 “notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary . . . . 17 U.S.C. § 304(c)(5).” (Opp’n at 6 8 (“Thus, any agreement that purports to waive, settle or limit the termination right is 7 unenforceable.”).) Such argument was previously considered and rejected in Steinbeck:

8 We do not read the phrase ‘agreement to the contrary’ so broadly that it would 9 include any agreement that has the effect of eliminating a termination right.
10 To do so would negate the effect of other provisions of the Copyright Act that 11 explicitly contemplate the loss of termination rights. . . . Moreover, 12 the 1994 Agreement did not divest the Steinbeck Descendants of any 13 termination right under section 304(d) when the parties entered into that 14 agreement. In 1994, only 17 U.S.C. § 304(c) provided a termination 15 right-section 304(d) would not become effective for another four years. It is 16 undisputed that the Steinbeck Descendants could not have exercised their 17 termination rights in 1994 because they lacked more than one-half of the 18 author’s termination interest. As of 1994, then, the agreement . . . did not 19 deprive the Steinbeck Descendants of any rights they could have realized at 20 that time. None of the parties could have contemplated that Congress would 21 create a second termination right four years later. Had Elaine Steinbeck not 22 entered into the 1994 Agreement, the section 304(c) termination right would 23 have expired, and Penguin would have been bound only by the 1938
24 Agreement for the duration of the copyright terms absent (as ultimately 25 happened) Congressional action. We cannot see how the 1994 Agreement 26 could be an ‘agreement to the contrary’ solely because it had the effect of 27 eliminating termination rights that did not yet exist.

19 Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 202–03 (emphasis added).

20 The same holds true here. In 1992, when Joseph Shuster passed away and his heirs
21 entered into the 1992 Agreement, “neither the parties to the 1992 Agreement, nor anybody
22 else, held a termination right . . . .” (Opp’n at 16.) As of 1992, then, “the agreement
23 entered into by [Jean and Frank] did not deprive the [Shuster heirs] of any rights they could 24 have realized at that time.” Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 203. Nor, of course, could the parties
25

---

26
27 <sup>1</sup> To the extent Defendants believe Jean and Frank struck a bad deal, “merely increas[ing] their pension
28 from $5,000 to $25,000,” it is not this Court’s place to renegotiate the parties’ contracts, notwithstanding
Defendants’ objection that “this small sum bears no relation to the value of Superman.” (Opp’n at 17.)

1 have contemplated that Congress would create a second termination right six years later.
2 In short, this Court agrees with Steinbeck's reasoning that the 1992 Agreement is not "an
3 'agreement to the contrary' solely because it had the effect of eliminating termination rights
4 that did not yet exist." Id.

5 Defendants contend "DC's motion is defective [because] it fails to address most of 6 Defendants' affirmative defenses to DC's claims, preventing summary judgment in DC's
7 favor, while permitting summary judgment against DC on its erroneous legal theories."
8 (Opp'n at 2.) The Court disagrees. It is not Plaintiff's duty to disprove Defendants' 9 affirmative defenses, but rather, it is Defendants who bear the burden of proving the 10 applicability of their affirmative defenses. See, e.g., Clark v. Capital Credit & Collection 11 Servs., 460 F.3d 1162, 1177 (9th Cir. 2006) (noting that a defendant bears the burden of 12 proof at summary judgment with respect to affirmative defenses); c.f. Digital Control Inc.
13 v. McLaughlin Mfg. Co., Inc., 248 F. Supp. 2d 1019, 1023–24 (W.D. Wash. 2003) ("Since 14 the affirmative defense of obviousness is Defendant's burden, by failing to challenge the 15 issue on summary judgment, Defendant fails to raise a genuine issue of material fact.").

16 In sum, the Court finds that the 1992 Agreement, which represented the Shuster
17 heirs' opportunity to renegotiate the prior grants of Joe Shuster's copyrights, superseded 18 and replaced all prior grants of the Superman copyrights. The 1992 Agreement thus 19 represents the parties' operative agreement and, as a post-1978 grant, it is not subject to 20 termination under 17 U.S.C. § 304(d).

21 Majority Interest

22 Section 304(d) of the Copyright Act provides that a termination notice must be 23 served "by the person or persons who . . . own and are entitled to exercise a total of more 24 than one-half of [an] author's termination interest" and "shall be signed by the [requisite]
25 number and proportion of the owners." (Mot. at 18 (quoting 17 U.S.C. §§ 304(d)(1), 26 (c)(1)–(4))); see also Steinbeck, 537 F.3d at 202 (recognizing that author's heirs "could not
27 have exercised their termination rights" if "they lacked more than one-half of the author's 28 termination interest" at the time their notice was served).

1 DC contends “[a]ccording to the Shuster heirs’ written contracts and deposition
2 admissions, the Estate owned 0% of Shuster’s putative termination interest when the Estate
3 served the [Termination] Notice.” (Mot. at 18.) In 2001, after all, the Shusters had 4 “transfer[red] and assign[ed] . . . all current and future rights, claims, title, copyrights and 5 interests” in “Joe Shuster’s creations” to the Pacific Pictures Joint Venture with Marc
6 Toberoff. (UF 31.) In 2003, the Estate “confirm[ed]” these rights included any “copyright
7 termination interest in ‘Superman’ pursuant to Section 304(d) of the U.S. Copyright Law.”
8 (UF 32.) Mark Warren Peary even admitted under oath that he understood when he signed 9 the agreement “that all of [ ] Joe Shuster rights, termination rights, to the extent they 10 existed, were being transferred and assigned to the venture just as it says.” (UF 33.)

11 Defendants contend “copyrights recaptured pursuant to a termination notice cannot 12 be anticipatorily transferred to anyone prior to the service of a termination notice, and can 13 be transferred only to the grantee [i.e., DC] or its successor before ‘the effective date of the 14 termination’ – here, October 26, 2013.” (Opp’n at 18 (quoting 17 U.S.C. § 304(c)(6)(D)).)
15 Thus, argue Defendants, “as a pure matter of law, the 2001/2003 [Pacific Pictures
16 Corporation] PPC Agreements – pre-dating both the effective date and the service of the 17 Shuster Executor’s termination notice – could not and did not transfer the prospective
18 copyrights to be recovered by the Shuster Termination.” (Opp’n at 18.)

19 DC argues Defendants must be held accountable for entering into these agreements, 20 notwithstanding their illegality. (Reply at 8 (“This illegality defense fails for two 21 reasons.”).) First, although defendants say the Pacific Pictures contracts “did not transfer 22 the prospective copyrights to be recovered by the Shuster Termination,” Peary testified 23 under oath, and without any objection, that the 2001 contract “transferr[ed] and assign[ed]
24 to the venture” “all of the Joe Shuster rights, termination rights, to the extent they existed . .
25 . . .” (Reply at 8 (citations omitted).) “The 2003 agreement reaffirmed the 2001 Agreement
26 [and] [t]hese admissions and facts are fatal to defendants’ defense.” (Id.)

27 While the Court finds problematic Defendants’ conduct – especially their failure to 28 inform the copyright office of agreements which they themselves believed would affect

1 ownership of the subject copyrights – these agreements do not alter the fact that the “right
2 to serve the Shuster Termination could not have been transferred to PPC.” (Opp’n at 18
3 (“No contract with PPC could create a new statutory class eligible or required to sign a
4 termination notice. Only the signature of Mr. Peary, the Shuster Executor, was required
5 and allowed by statute. 17 U.S.C. § 304(c)(4).”)) Thus, although Defendants may have 6 believed that their contracts transferred the Shuster heirs’ termination rights, those 7 agreements did not and, indeed, could not have done so.

8 Second, DC argues Defendants fail “to address the public-policy rule that they may 9 not assert the illegality of their own contracts as a defense.” (Reply at 8 (“Like a swindler
10 who induces a minor to sign a contract, [D]efendants cannot claim their contracts are illegal 11 to avoid liabilities they create.”)) While that may be so, the Court does not believe that 12 estoppel is applicable here. In fact, were the Court to hold Defendants to their contracts
13 (and find they lacked the majority interest necessary to terminate), it would essentially 14 rewrite copyright law, allowing parties to traffic in future rights. See Milne, 430 F.3d at 15 1047 (law “prohibit[s] a new grant of rights terminated by statute until after the effective
16 date of termination – to avoid trafficking in future interests” by third parties). The Court
17 thus finds the agreements did not transfer ownership of the subject copyrights, and that 18 Defendants retained the requisite majority share.

19 Statutory Right to Terminate

20 The 1998 Copyright Term Extension Act allows an “author’s executor” to terminate 21 when the “[t]ermination rights provided for in subsection (c) have expired on or before the 22 effective date of the [CTEA]” – October 27, 1998 – and the author “has not previously
23 exercised such termination right.” (Mot. at 21 (quoting 17 U.S.C. § 304(d)) (“The Shuster
24 Estate – formed by Peary, as its executor, in 2003 – relies on this provision to terminate,
25 but § 304(d) has no application here.”)) DC argues “[b]y its plain language, § 304(d)
26 applies only where the window for exercising a termination right under the 1976 Copyright
27 Act opened and closed – i.e., ‘expired’ – and an author or statutory heir failed to terminate
28 during that window. It does not apply where [as here] an author died while the window

1 was open without terminating, without leaving a statutory heir, and when his sole heir,
2 Jean, fully resolved his estate in 1992.” (Id. at 22.)

3 Given the Court’s finding that the 1992 Agreement bars termination, as well as the 4 perfunctory briefing of the issue, the Court will not explore the matter at this time.

5 Third Claim

6 DC argues it is entitled to summary judgment on its Third Claim, contending
7 “Defendants’ consent agreements violate section 304(c)(6)(D) of the Copyright Act by (i)
8 purporting to assign the Shusters’ copyright interests to Pacific Pictures before the effective
9 termination date in 2013, and (ii) barring the Shusters from making any deal with DC
10 without Toberoff’s and the Siegels’ consent.” (Reply at 10.)

11 Section 304(c)(6)(D) provides:

12 A further grant, or agreement to make a further grant, of any right covered by 13 a terminated grant is valid only if it is made after the effective date of the 14 termination. As an exception, however, an agreement for such a further grant may be made between the author or [his heirs] and the original grantee or [its successor], after the notice of termination has been served . . . .

15 17 U.S.C. § 304(c)(6)(D).

16 As such, between November 10, 2003 (when the Notice was served) and October 26,
17 2013 (its effective date), DC was and is the only party that may enter into an agreement
18 with the Shuster heirs regarding the Superman rights sought to be recaptured. (Mot. at 23
19 (“Section 304(c)(6)(D) not only bars third parties like Toberoff from ‘trafficking in future
20 [copyright] interests,’ Milne, 430 F.3d at 1047, it protects original grantees who, like DC,
21 spent decades developing and promoting the copyrighted property.”)). As DC points out, 22 “Congress described this right in the original grantee’s favor as ‘in the nature of a right of 23 ‘first refusal.’” (Mot. at 23 (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 94-1476 at 127).) In Milne, the Ninth
24 Circuit reviewed the statutory text and legislative history, and confirmed that Section
25 304(c)(6)(D) “give[s] the original grantee a competitive advantage over third parties” akin 26 to a “right of ‘first refusal.’” 430 F.3d at 1047.

27 ///

1 Defendants concede that “copyrights recaptured pursuant to a termination notice
2 cannot be anticipatorily transferred to anyone prior to the service of the termination notice, 3 and can be transferred only to the grantee or its successor before ‘the effective date of the
4 termination’ – here, October 26, 2013.” (Opp’n at 18 (quoting 17 U.S.C. §304(c)(6)(D)).)

5 The Court further agrees with Defendants that, “as a pure matter of law, the 6 2001/2003 PPC Agreements – pre-dating both the effective date and the service of the 7 Shuster Executor’s termination notice – could not and did not transfer the prospective
8 copyrights to be recovered by the Shuster Termination.” (Opp’n at 18 (emphasis added).)
9 Such is the declaration DC seeks by this, its Third Claim.<sup>2</sup>

10 Defendants do not dispute that they entered into multiple agreements purporting to 11 grant and otherwise encumber rights covered by a (to be) terminated grant; indeed, they 12 agree that those agreements are void insofar as they aim to transfer the subject copyrights.
13 (See Opp’n at 18.) Those agreements run afoul of 17 U.S.C. § 304(c)(6)(D) as well and,
14 accordingly, are hereby deemed invalid.

15 ///

16 ///

17 ///

18 ///

19 ///

20 ///

21 ///

22 ///

23 _____
24 <sup>2</sup> The Court finds curious Defendants’ argument that section 304(c)(6)(D) “does not state that ‘a [third 25 party] grant is valid only if negotiated after the termination date.’” (Opp’n at 22 (citation omitted).) For 26 one, DC does not base its Third Claim on Defendants’ negotiations, but rather on Defendants’ finalized
27 agreements. That section, moreover, does in fact state that a third party grant agreement “is valid only 28 if it is made after the effective date of termination.” § 304(c)(6)(D) (emphasis added). And, finally, it is beyond dispute that the subject agreements at issue here were made well before the termination date.

1 IV. CONCLUSION

2 As discussed above, DC's motion for summary judgment is GRANTED. [458]
3 Defendants' cross-motion for summary judgment is DENIED.<sup>3</sup> [478]

4
5
6 SO ORDERED

7 October 17, 2012

8
9
10 OTIS D. WRIGHT, II
11 UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25 <sup>3</sup> Defendants' cross-motion also attacks DC's Second Claim concerning the scope of Defendants' 26 termination notice. As Defendants point out, however, "DC's Second Claim (FAC ¶¶135-64) seeks to 27 re-litigate, and overlaps with, issues in Siegel v. Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc., C.D. Cal. Case No.
28 04-08400 ODW (RZx), currently on appeal. Much of this claim is barred by the doctrine of issue preclusion/collateral estoppel." (Defs' MSJ, Dkt No. 478 at 3 (citations omitted).) As that claim is related to one currently on review before the Ninth Circuit, this Court declines to rule on that aspect of Defendants' motion.